THE TONE

Warm, human and honest — like explaining something to a friend, not reading ad copy. No hype, no hard sell. The sentences are short because they are spoken, not read. Let them breathe.

READING NOTES

Each line is timed to what happens on screen. The duration on the left is how long that line has in the picture — treat it as a target, not a cage. The gaps between lines are real silence in the cut; you do not need to fill them.

HOW TO SAY IT

Revel	REV -uhl — as in “revelry”. Never “re-VEL”.
lets revel dot io	Written out on purpose. Say it as the address: “let’s revel dot I-O”.
R S V P	Spelled out, letter by letter: “are-ess-vee-pee”.
Q R code	Spelled out: “cue-are code”.
V A T	Spelled out: “vee-ay-tee”.
Stripe	The payment company. English, as written.
Mira, Ren, Noa, Jordan, Bea, Lena, Felix, Paul	Characters in the demos. Say them naturally.

1 Episode ten. Polls. Asking the members instead of guessing — which night, which venue, which name for the new thing.

00:00–00:07

7.5 s

— 1.2 s of silence —

2 A poll starts with a question and an audience. Members only, here — or everyone, one membership tier, or just the people coming to an event. Then who gets to see the results, and when. Anonymous or not is your call, and it's locked once the poll opens.

00:09–00:25

16.6 s

3 Then the options. One multiple choice question, three nights. You can add more questions, or a free text one, but one is usually enough. Create it, and it's saved as a draft.

00:25–00:37

11.4 s

4 Open it, and it's live. Members get a link they can vote from, and you can close it whenever you've heard enough.

00:37–00:44

6.9 s

— 3.4 s of silence —

5 As a member, the page tells you the rules up front: who can vote, who sees the results, and that your name stays out of it. Then one tap, and submit.

00:48–00:57

9.3 s

6 And because the organizer chose to share them, the results are right there. Five voters. Saturday it is.
